OCCUPATION OF MEXICO URGED

that it was several years after the Civil war before order was fully restored throughout the south. The ambassador's statement follows: Mexico today has a stable government. True, there are some districts in which a few bandits are at large. Mexico is in the aftermath of a civil war and the conditions in these few areas are such as have followed such struggles in all lands. In your own south it was many years after Agostinista before conditions were restored to normal and your central government was occupied a long time in the work of pacification in a few of the remote districts. Yet because the James boys, the Apache Kid, Geronimo and other bandits in the southwest continued their depredations after the civil war when no one would urge that the American government was unstable.

Mexico Like Old West
"In addition to the after-effects of the civil strife there are parts of Mexico in which conditions today are much like they were in your own west not so many years ago. Your army was kept busy for two generations by the Indians and bandits of the west. Within my own memory the border districts of Mexico were raided almost constantly by Indians escaping from your own side of the border. Co-operation of the two governments (treaty of 1882) in the matter of pursuit of bandits and cattle thieves across the international line resulted in the suppression of most of these disorders in the early eighties, culminating in the capture of the Apache, Geronimo, and his band of Chinichol Indians by the forces of General Miles in 1885.

"We are now trying to arrange for a renewal of the former system. Foreigners in Mexico today are accorded every protection. In the few disturbed areas they are usually made the victims of bandits, but in every case the government is devoting the utmost energy to the pursuit and punishment of the criminals. In such areas the foreigner undertakes a risk that he assumes when he enters such an area, and his peril is no greater than the danger to Mexicans.

Admits Bandits Are Active
"A few wandering bandits scattered over an immense and sparsely settled country—a country of mountains and wilderness in part—can keep a great many troops busy in pursuit, as your own western experiences have demonstrated. The Mexican government today is spending two-thirds of its national income in the pursuit and punishment of bandits. It has an army of over 50,000 men engaged in this work and troops are ever on the heels of these bands. The whole business is in process of being wound up at this time. Zapata and many other bandit chiefs have been tracked to their camps and killed.

"Other small bands are breaking up. The Mexican government today is making a showing in this tremendous task of pacification which compares favorably with the effort of any government which has ever been confronted with conditions at all similar. Mexico has never repudiated any of her international obligations and will meet every debt which is due. She has the resources to discharge every obligation without making any serious drain on her national wealth, and as fast as these assets become available with the revival of industry she will meet her obligations. In the oil region there has not been one instance of confiscation, nor are the companies paying royalties. In 1918 they produced 44,000,000 barrels of oil out of a potential capacity of over 550,000,000 barrels. Their own published balance sheets show their prosperity and profits.

Propaganda of Enemies
"The very intense press propaganda of these days, when the principal bandits are being killed, captured or are surrendering to the government forces, or disbanding, and when the pacification of the country is in sight, is interpreted in my country as the last effort of expatriates, members of the old regime of Mexico and their powerful confederates and politicians in Europe and this country to precipitate armed intervention, as they feel that when the complete pacification, the rehabilitation of the industries now in suspense, the intensification of commercial relations, and the general development of the wonderful resources of the country are accomplished, their dream of the return of an obsolete despotic system of government and the embolism of two nations in armed conflict will be a thing of the past."

ing with alien enemy property. It is expected that Bradley Palmer and others who advised the American delegation at Versailles will appear before the committee next week.

President Wilson had intended, it was said at the white house to go to the capitol this afternoon and talk over the treaty with the American delegation senators. He abandoned the plan when he learned that the senate was not in session and that Senator Hitchcock, Nebraska, the administration leader in the treaty fight was out of town. The foreign affairs committee also had recessed over today and will meet again Monday when it expects to complete preliminary reading of the treaty.

VOICES CRITICISM OF RAIL ADMINISTRATION

WASHINGTON, July 26.—Criticism of the railroad administration for reducing freight rates on imports received on the Pacific was voiced in the house today by Representative Fordney, republican, Michigan, chairman of the ways and means committee. The result was a discrimination against American manufacturers, a hardship to workers, and in effect a reduction of tariff duties, he said.

Mr. Fordney referred to President Wilson as "our general manager," and added that he had "discriminated against his people in favor of the orient, South America and Mexico."

Mr. Fordney said he had a list of 483 articles on which the freight rates were lower on the foreign product than on the American.

Increased revenue for the railroads while under government control, he continued, had been obtained at a price to the general public.

For every 77 cents of increased revenue of the railroads, he asserted, "we have spent 123 cents. If that is not extravagance, I know what it is; it is incompetence."

ENGLAND'S PART IN RUSSIA CRITICIZED

LONDON, July 26.—The former prime minister H. H. Asquith, speaking at Edgeware today said:

"I regard with bewilderment and apprehension that part this country is playing in Russia. The country wants a clearer definition than has been given of what our commitments, definite and prospective. I hope that the attempt to commit us further in Russia will be successfully resisted. The future government of Russia is a matter for the Russian people and for no one else. The economic conditions of the world and of our own country were never more menacing."
